The medical cannabis industry has ceased to be a projection to become a reality in Latin America. By 2020 the countries that have legalized their production, have traveled in some cases 4 to 5 years in this way, enough time for the industry to begin to have strength and great deals to take part. On the other hand, scientific research around the world is increasingly precise and conclusive about the benefits it has for humans in a variety of products other than medication.

At the Latin American level, Chile for example has more scientific strength, Colombia leads the productive sector and Uruguay was the first to break the stigma. With the perspective of current growth, bringing together Cannaciencia, Symposium on medical cannabis and Cannabiz Latino Hub, cannabis investment summit, in the Cannabis science and investment week is a great incentive to meet entrepreneurs, investors, scientists, doctors, farmers, researchers and anyone interested in this growing industry and meet in May 2020 in Bogotá, Colombia.
